

Lesson 9: Not all Minds are Alike

Discussion Questions

- Have you noticed how a smell can bring back memories? Think of a time you smelled something that triggered a memory in your mind. What was the smell? What was the memory? Did you remember it in detail or just a little memory? How long ago did this memory take place? Share some examples together with the class.
- Think of an example of something happening in your conscious experience that would activate your temporal lobe. Share ideas. (Sounds, speech.)
- Think of an example of something happening in your conscious experience that would activate your occipital lobe. Share ideas. (vision)
- Think of an example of something happening in your conscious experience that would activate your frontal lobe. Share ideas. (movement, or making a plan, or decision.)
- Think of an example of something happening in your conscious experience that would activate your parietal lobe. Share ideas. (taste or touch)